

Berlin Adlershof – City of Science, Technology and Media

Berlin Adlershof is one of the most successful concentrations of high technology in Germany. Since 1991, this research, business, and media centre has grown continuously on an area of 4.2 square kilometers (1 038 acres), embedded in an overall urban planning concept.

At the core of the concept is a Science and Technology Park hosting 413 companies, twelve non-university affiliate research institutes, and six science institutes of the Humboldt University of Berlin. Here, approximately 7 000 people are employed plus another 6 600 students.

The companies and the non-university scientific institutes are focused on

- Photonics and optics technologies
- Materials and microsystems technologies
- Information and communication technologies
- Environmental, biological and energy technologies

Besides this, Adlershof boasts 145 media companies, making it the most important centre for media in Berlin. In close proximity to science and technology, one finds a collection of over 200 companies, shops, hotels, restaurants, 66 hectares landscaped park, and now more than 200 private homes. Altogether, 13 500 people work in the City of Science, Technology, and Media.
